Benito Arruñada*
Economics of the Interaction between Land Registries and Cadastres

DRAFT—PLEASE, DO NOT DISTRIBUTE
This version: December 2016

Abstract

Land demarcation is a key element in the definition of property rights and plays a prominent role in titling efforts. This paper relies on the sequential-exchange theory of property rights to distinguish between physical and legal land demarcation in order to better understand the costs and benefits of demarcation. It argues that voluntary demarcation is generally optimal. Consistent with its argument, it observes that demarcation conflicts play a minor role in title-related litigation and even seem to increase after physical demarcation is made mandatory. Moreover, a related popular policy, leading to merge and link cadastres and land registries, does not necessarily correlates with lower transaction costs.

* Pompeu Fabra University and Barcelona GSE. E-mail: benito.arrunada@upf.edu. This work has greatly benefitted from exchanges with Rafael Arnáiz Ramos, Jesús Camy Escobar, Juan Carlos Casas Rojo, Wim Louwman, Fernando P. Méndez González, Nicolás Nogueroles, Jacques Vos, Mihail Taus, Ioanna Tzinieri, Rick Wouters and participants at ELRA and UN-ECE workshops. It received support from the Spanish Ministry of the Economy and Competitiveness through grant ECO2014-57131-R. Usual disclaimers apply.